

Harper's Campaign Against a Mythical Netflix Tax Backfires, Badly

by Stephen Elliott-Buckley - Thursday, August 06, 2015

<https://politicsrespun.org/2015/08/harpers-campaign-against-a-mythical-netflix-tax-backfires-badly/>

Check out our savvy PM, getting all hashtaggy on us all!

But to quote Mr. Layton from 2011, it's become a #Fail, or, "Hashtag-Fail" if you will.

You see, our PM has decided to say that others want to bring in a Netflix Tax. So he opposed it. But he just made that up.

And now social media is punishing him. With the aplomb we've come to expect...remember #TellVicEverything?

Try the trending #NoNetflixTax to see what people are doing to our lying PM.

<https://twitter.com/stephenlautens/status/629105986448556032>

Some unlucky social media intern is going to get heinously fired for this!

And, because FUN, there's a new hashtag game called #HarperANetflixShow.

<https://twitter.com/PatOndabak/status/629135939508441089>

And you'd think the PM would be more careful with the blindfold and the loaded semi-automatic pistol that is social media. I mean, it's not like there's a leader's debate tonight or anything...oh wait!

What could possibly go wrong?

But wait, there's more!

What got me doing a little Cape Breton jig last night was the possibility that Harper's plan to call such a long election campaign has dissolved parliament in such a fashion that he may be required to testify to whatever he really did in the Mike Duffy bribery scandal!

It's like Christmas in July, and not in a Pierre Poilievre way!

Enjoy the debate tonight!